

For those who are traveling with children just learning to walk or toddlers not yet secure in their mobility or babies crawling wherever their curiosity leads them, the house poses some challenges.

Here's what you'll want to consider:

1) the windows have secure latches but many of the windows are built low to the ground, so easily accessed.

2) there are stairs on every floor-- these do not have gates, so you will need to close them off with chairs, or bring your own portable gates.

3) our neighbor has a crib that you can borrow (with enough advance notice), but one of our recent guests brought along a Travel Crib (click on this link) that they found tremendously useful.

4) as with most houses, there are tables with corners and drawers without locks, so you'll want to keep an eye on things-- no unattended toddlers, of course.

This said, our house has been home to families with babies, with toddlers, with teenagers too. There is lots of room for privacy, and plenty of places to set up play areas for children. If you do have little ones, we can't promise you'll sleep through the night, but with a little planning and thoughtfulness, you'll have a fantastic vacation.
